BON Junge.

Start your journey to a room transformation with travel-themed vintage finds.

BY KAREN WILHELMSEN | STYLING BY FLIK BY DESIGN | PHOTOGRAPHY BY DONNA GRIFFITH PHOTOGRAPHY

By the 1940s, luggage from popular brands like Shwayder and Koffler became the preferred way to travel. Today, you can easily find suitcases at a flea market from $80 to $130, depending on the brand and condition. In your home, they are a stylish way to add storage.

For timeless charm, a neutral color palette is always in style. But your spaces can showcase warm tones while still being anything but boring. Here we show you how suitcases and architectural salvage will add character to your rooms by providing eye-catching displays. A globe-trotting theme keeps the look playful, fresh and full of vintage flair.

1 Safe Travels

Vintage suitcases are one of the most versatile flea-market finds. With their worn leather cases and variety of colors, they tell a story all their own. Display a set of three in various brown and black tones, stacked from biggest to smallest. If you don't have a stand or bench to prop them on, stack more to use as a side table or coffee table. Not only will the height draw the eye up to your focal point displayed above it, but you can also store practical items inside. Keeping with the travel theme, industrial-style clocks (see page 9) tell the time in cities all around the world.

2 Reclaimed Keepsakes

Architectural salvage is an easy way to bring eye-catching wall décor to a room. Here, small decorative wood planks of various designs and sizes are hung horizontally and vertically to create a symmetrical look. A rust-colored Statue of Liberty figure drives the travel theme home, while pairing perfectly with the neutral color palette. Have fun finding salvage at reclamation yards, flea markets, secondhand stores or nonprofits—all without breaking the bank.

FOREVER

Rediscover your love of these 10 retro collectible toys—and let the games begin.

Y AND STYLING BY JICKIE TORRES

BY JENNA DIXON | PHOTOGRAPHY AND STYLING BY JICKIE TORRES

Collecting vintage toys begins with finding the ones that bring back warm memories of the past.

The 1950s gave us toys that are among some of the hottest items in the collectors' world today. Whether you're a connoisseur or just love a good walk down memory lane, these one-of-a-kind finds are sure to hold a special place in your heart.

Let's take a look at the top toys and how their vintage charm can grace your shelves. These items from collector Diane Sedo provide retro pops of color that can brighten and enhance any room.

💶 Glowning Around

Made in the U.S., the snap-together Archer Acrobatic Plastic clowns from the '50s are a classic. These cute little guys like to clown around and disappear as soon as they are spotted on Etsy or at flea markets. Due to their small size, they look adorable in a nursery or as a display on a child's bedroom wall. Find these interlocking friends for about $10 a set.

2 Hit the Ground Rollin'

Vintage roller skates are rolling back into the limelight. Nothing says playful like a pair of shiny skates, which can be used as bookends or displayed on a mantel. The beauty of old skates lets you bring together various décor styles like industrial, traditional, cottage chic and retro. Metal-wheel roller skates were a children's favorite in the '50s, manufactured by companies like Sears Roebuck and Co. and Globe Skate Corp. They can still be found today on Etsy and eBay.

3 It's Party Time

An old-school party favorite, Pin the Tail on the Donkey, is sure to bring back memories from when you were a kid. The charming graphics of the '50s to '60s party game make it a fun collectors' item for use at a birthday party. Complete donkey party sets with tails can be found on Etsy from $10 and up. Throw in some noisemakers and antique tin toys to complete this fun look.

Cowboys Forever

For boys who grew up in the '50s and early '60s, Davy Crockett and Roy Rogers led the pack of Western heroes to the toy aisle. A Mattel Fanner 50 Cap Gun with its pearl handle might not fire a cap anymore, but paired with a pair of Western gloves inside a vintage holster, it can bring a piece of the Wild West to any room. Fanner 50 Cap Guns have retained their value and can be found on eBay and other toy collecting websites for about $45 to $300, depending on condition.

🔂 Round About Fun

Rich in design, from small cat's-eyes to the larger, more sought-after biggies, antique marbles are not only for play. Up until the early 1900s, popular handmade glass marbles were imported from Germany in many colors and styles. By midcentury, Marble King, and later Jabo, Inc., were both mass-producing marbles in the U.S. It's difficult to know the origin and age of marbles just by looking at them, so condition is key for collectors. Display these beauties in a vase with flowers or in a vintage jar to glisten on their own.

6 *O*n Pins and Needles

Clothespins and glass jars were originally used as a children's game, Drop the Clothespin in the Bottle, played by dropping a clothespin into an empty milk bottle while standing on a chair. Today, they can bring decorative appeal to a laundry room or bathroom. Or leave the game out for all to enjoy. This versatile pastime is an inexpensive flea-market or estate-sale find.

Teonic Character

Gracing the 1960s kitchen, Bosco the Clown brought the joy of chocolate milk to the young and the young at heart. The vintage Bosco chocolate-syrup jar that turned into a money bank once emptied brought smiles to kids across the country. Spread the joy by filling the glass base with gumballs, or add a vintage touch with antique marbles. Bosco the Clown won't cost you a pretty penny. Collect other clown-themed toys, such as this Sportcraft wooden clown soldier ring toss game, to complete the look.

8 Hello, Dolly!

Post-World War II dolls took on a new realistic look with hard plastic molds. The '50s through '60s-style dolls were given hair in various colors and hairstyles, sleep eyes, real upper lashes and beautiful plump cheeks. The variety of dolls in circulation makes them a fun collectors' piece. Here (see page 18), a New Basic Readers book from 1951 evokes memories of school days gone by.

9 Breakfast of Champions

As a child, your choice of cereal had more to do with the prizes in the box than the cereal itself. Tiddley Winks, decoders and bug observers were just some of the cool treasures found in Kellogg's, General Mills and Nestle cereals. Marketed to children and made popular in 1952, the Oscar Meyer Weiner Whistle gave kids the chance to act like they were operating the Oscar Meyer Weiner mobile itself. Collect and display fun '50s American premiums in shadow boxes to really show them off. Most will only set you back a few dollars, with rare toys around $10.

Teatime Treat

From the brilliant colors to the delightful graphics, it's easy to see why lithograph tin tea sets are highly prized by collectors. These popular tea sets are fairly rare and were made by the Ohio Art Company of Bryan, Ohio, from the 1920s to 1960s. Let their charm speak for itself by displaying them in a nursery or child's bedroom. The tea sets can be found with painted scenes of fairies, singing birds or circus animals.

Search for these six hot flea-market finds you'll never go wrong with.

Do you ever get that thrill of discovery after finding the perfect vintage object for an affordable price?

For Eddie Ross, this is an everyday occurrence. He has spent his life scouring flea markets and antiques stores, learning the best ways to decorate a home affordably yet still have it feel like royalty.

In his new book, Modern Mix, Eddie shares his tips and ideas for how to train your eye to look for those special finds so that every day is a day of discovery. He also discusses the best ways to display and decorate with these unique vintage finds. Here, we take a look at six hot finds for fall—so you can get excited to start hunting.

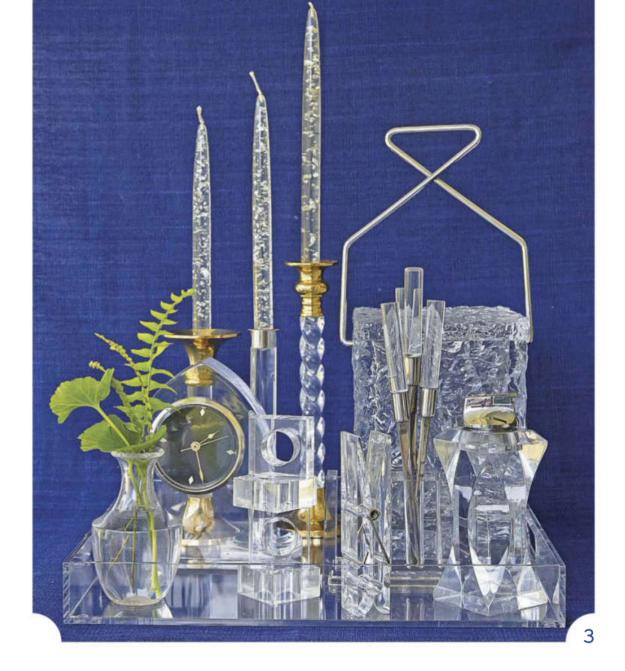

Lighten the Mood

The most intriguing thing about candlesticks is that they come in a wide variety of shapes, sizes and styles. Whether you use a candelabra or a single candlestick, they immediately add a picturesque feeling to a room and can set the mood for your occasion. Eddie suggests looking for clean-lined styles in silver and brass and mixing your antique candlesticks with colorful candles for a layered look. You could even mix and match your candles and candlesticks for different events. The low light they give off sets an intimate mood. Find an antique pair in brass at a flea market or online, on sites like eBay, for as little $15.

2 Worth One's Salt

Before salt shakers rose in popularity, saltcellars were used to house salt. These vessels could be open or have lids, with the salt served using a little spoon. You can find them decorated in jewels or with fancy designs, in gold or silver, in a circular or oval shape, with the serving spoons just as varied in style. Add glamour and intrigue to your table by skipping the salt shaker and reverting back to these vintage cellars. Find them at flea markets or antique shops, and slowly build your collection. Once you have a variety, switch them out for different occasions or corral them on a serving tray for an instant display.

3 All Cleared Up

Lucite is a type of hard plastic, also known as Perspex or Plexiglas. It has the appeal of looking like glass without being as breakable—and is also a lot more affordable. Its transparency makes it a great material to use on a window or coffee tabletop, as reflective surfaces can easily update a room's style and make it appear larger and brighter. There are even Lucite candles (shown above); though you can't burn them, they create a unique conversation starter.

When buying a Lucite object, make sure it isn't cracked or yellowing. Otherwise, it can last the test of time, while bringing a sense of sophistication to a room with its glass-like appearance.

ARaise the Bar

There are some dishes that you think you can live without, but in reality, they could add style and elegance to your kitchen collection—and home. Pitchers and creamers are two of those dishes.

Available in an abundance of shapes and sizes, you can use them for a plethora of tasks. Fill large ones with water or lemonade and small ones with sauces, gravy or salad dressings to make a splash at your next dinner party, Eddie suggests.

If you find an antique pitcher that's beautiful but cracked at the top, don't despair; you can still use it as a vase and let flowers camouflage the blemishes. From pewter to porcelain, in a Venetian style or Midcentury Modern, sprinkle these collectibles on kitchen counters or amidst retro barware.

Think Inside the Box

Jewelry boxes are usually small, but they can add a lot of dynamic impact to a room. Available in a variety of intricate designs, it's easy to find one that meets your fancy. Eddie recommends looking for unusual shapes, such as a bean-shaped box, and paying attention to the markings—their meaning could add history and intrigue to your spaces.

Despite the name, jewelry boxes don't just have to house jewelry. A small one can hold pushpins or other office supplies on a desk. Eddie stores remote controls in a long jewelry box, providing an easy place to remember where they are, while also being a beautiful way to disguise their normalcy.

6 Not-So-Silver Platters

Who says all of your plates have to look alike? Create a unique tableware setting by mixing new and vintage and plain and decorative; your elaborate mix of plates will create a story to tell on the table—one that guests will surely be fascinated by. According to Eddie, you can "form infinite combinations, each with its own style" by pairing different colors and patterns for an eclectic mix. Freshen up your well-used sets of china by inserting some with colorful, vibrant patterns. Or, plates can even make eye-catching wall décor grouped in clusters that go with your home's color palette.

A Flea Mentality

Eddie Ross's tips for navigating the flea market and scoring the best deals.

- Know Before You Go: If you know the kind of item you're looking for, research it first so you'll know what a decent price is and be able to bargain with dealers. You can also usually get better deals by paying with cash, so make sure you have enough on you.
- Go Against the Flow: Start at the back of the flea market, where not as many people will have been yet, to have first dibs on better finds. Have a map of the flea market handy so you can make notes if you want to come back to anything.
- Take the Time to Look: If you love an item but it's too expensive, keep looking around. You might find a cheaper version elsewhere, and if you come back to the same dealer later, he might be more willing to bargain with you. Also, don't pass up looking through the boxes of junk—those are the best places to find a hidden treasure.

AHANDMADE

Add simple autumnal touches to your décor with fall-themed flea-market finds and handcrafted creations.

WRITTEN, STYLED AND PHOTOGRAPHED BY MELINDA GRAHAM

1. CENTER OF ATTENTION

Pepper dried, painted gourds throughout your home for a festive touch. You can create a stunning centerpiece by setting a dried wreath in the center of your table. Place a bowl in the opening of the wreath, and then pile gourds into the bowl. Flank two sides with candlesticks for an elegant evening glow.

2. IRRESISTIBLE IN IVORY

Vintage trinket boxes, like this one made by Ivory Dynasty, are a treat to find. Made of carved resin, they look as if they are antique ivory or bone. Don't be afraid to display them with a mix of patterns, styles and materials. Stick with a simple, neutral color palette. For an accent color, tuck in a few artificial silk flowers or dried slices of quince.

As the breezes blow cooler and the days grow shorter, it can only mean one thing—fall is approaching. And a new season means new inspiration for festive decorating. But it can also create a design challenge if the golden yellows and deep pumpkin oranges don't easily blend with your everyday décor.

Here we show you which neutral-colored vintage autumnal accessories and budget-friendly finds are worth the hunt.

That's the Spirit

Thrift shops, garage sales and flea markets are terrific hunting grounds for vintage decorations. Before you hit the fleas, think of the shapes and themes that go hand in hand with autumn: pumpkins, gourds, pinecones, cornucopias, pheasants and more.

Find ways to fill your home with vintage autumnal treasures that not only complement your spaces but also will last through Thanksgiving. No matter the time of year, keep an eye out for vintage pumpkins at your favorite thrift spots. One special find at a time will slowly build a festive stash of fall décor to fill your home.

The Great Pumpkins

Be on the lookout for these autumnal essentials you'll be able to use for years to come.

- Trinket Boxes: Delightfully shaped like pumpkins and gourds, trinket boxes make great additions to fall décor. They are small and typically have delicate, charming details. Create a lovely vignette by placing one on a platter surrounded by pinecones and fresh greens.
- Ceramics: Ceramic pumpkins are the easiest to find because they were a popular craft project and made inexpensively in large quantities. Many that were produced in the 1950s and '60s can be found today for a bargain. Look for items like pumpkin cookie jars, turkey or pheasant figures and large cornucopias in solid, neutral colors. Use them as a table centerpiece or as mantel décor.
- Terracotta: Bring your vintage outdoor décor indoors, or search for oversized cement and terracotta pumpkins and gourds to use as statement pieces inside your home. If the finish is too rustic, they can be painted or whitewashed to better suit your style.
- Papier-Mâché: A popular material among crafters, papier-mâché objects can be found painted with intense colors and whimsical details. Turn these finds into one-of-a-kind treasures with a coat of white paint and some simple distressing. Generally, a cast-off papier-mâché pumpkin can be snatched up for less than a dollar.
- Handmade Crafts: Artificial fruit and acorns covered with dried leaves were once a popular craft. Some of these old beauties can still be found at yard sales or thriff shops. If you love the look but haven't been lucky enough to find any, don't fret. They are very simple to make. Simply cover artificial fruit, gourds or pumpkins with fall leaves using decoupage glue. Pile them into a big bowl or tuck them into a floral arrangement.

Preserving with Wax

Popular during the Victorian era, coating fruits and flowers with scented wax preserves their color, keeps their shape and provides a wonderful aroma all season long.

What you'll need:

- Dried flowers and fruit
- Block of wax
- Candle essential oil
- Double boiler
- Waxed paper
- Tonas

What you'll do:

- 1. Make sure that the fruit and flowers are completely dry and no longer contain any moisture.
- 2. Cover your work surface with waxed paper.
- 3. Melt wax in a double boiler over hot water.
- 4. Scent your melted wax with the candle oil scent of your choice. Add in the oil slowly until the desired level of fragrance is reached.
- 5. Using tongs, slowly and gently lower a dried flower or slice of fruit into the wax. Coat it lightly. Repeat this process until the piece is completely covered. Allow the excess to drip into the pot; then carefully place the piece onto the waxed paper to cool and harden.
- 6. Repeat step 5, one piece at a time. Don't let the pieces touch when they are cooling on the waxed paper.
- 7. Once they're completely dry and cool, use the waxed fruit and flowers in your centerpieces and decorations. Keep them away from heat sources and out of direct sunlight.
- 8. After use, store them in an airtight container in a dry and dark place until next season.

3. DIY DESIGN

Dig out your vintage collectibles to add to your fall decorations. Look for pieces that will enhance the fall color scheme, like brown and white transferware. Add a few old books for texture, and you're well on your way to a vintage-inspired vignette.

4. NEUTRAL NOTIONS

Ceramic pumpkins and statues may not hold great value, but they do have an abundance of charm that can be a festive addition to any fall tablescape. The trick is to look for autumn-themed shapes in solid neutral colors. That way, they will go with a variety of textiles and will pair well with your décor.

5. HOMESPUN STYLE

Find papier-mâché holiday decorations at flea markets and yard sales. If the colors don't go with your home's look, give them a solid coat of white or cream paint. They will be transformed into simple and stylish decorations.

A homeowner's pastime of collecting vintage dolls, antique toys and portraits translates into nostalgic spaces.

> BY COCOFEATURES.COM WRITTEN AND STYLED BY LINDA VAN DER HAM/LINDIVIDU.COM PHOTOGRAPHED BY CAROLINE COEHORST

"Old nostalgic objects have always been part of my interiors, but my taste for decorating has changed lately," homeowner Ria de Waal says. "Before, I liked things which had a nostalgic feel but that were newly made; now I prefer real, authentic stuff and buy only old furniture and objects.

Soothing Palette

The light blue wall color in Ria's home, Farrow and Ball's Parma Gray, has been a mainstay for the last 30 years. She finds cool colors on the walls comforting, which she balances out with warmer tones on wood furnishings that pair well with her dreamy white and blue palette. The pale wall color also acts as the perfect backdrop for her extensive collections of dolls and vintage portraits.

"I like to combine and to mix," Ria says. In the dining room you'll find old wooden Biedermeier chairs she and her husband, Wouter, bought when they got married nearly 50 years ago. The chairs were trendy at the time they were purchased and have since gained new life as nostalgic vintage pieces. "To place two different chairs at the dining table is something I really like. Mixing makes an interior much more interesting."

Mixing makes an interior

much more interesting.

In Love with Antiques

Wouter, quite the handyman, is also a lover of antiques with patina. He replaced the home's new doors with old ones, has made some of the furniture out of salvaged materials and shares Ria's fondness for rustic décor.

"When I buy something new to replace an object in our home, it is because I found something better, something more authentic. My husband and I are real collectors. We started collecting 47 years ago," Ria says. "Old objects all have a story. I wonder about them—where they came from and who [the original owners] were—but mostly you never [find out]. When you buy something at a flea market, it often stays a mystery."

1. PRESERVING BEAUTY

Wouter made this cabinet (see opposite) to house Ria's collection of vintage dolls. "They are all German-designed dolls. Some of the dolls and dresses are so fragile; behind the glass door they are safe and I can still look at them," she says.

Child's Play

Start your doll collection with this classic German keepsake.

What to collect:

Kämmer und Reinhardt dolls

- History: Kämmer und Reinhardt was a doll manufacturer founded in Germany by Ernst Kämmer and Franz Reinhardt. The dolls were produced from 1886 to 1932, first made with wax heads and later with heads of bisque and celluloid.
- Where to find it: You'll have more luck and find a better variety of these dolls online, on sites like eBay or Etsy. If you find them at flea markets, though, you'll probably be able to strike a better deal. Most range from $250 to $450, depending on the outfit, era, size and popularity.
- What to look for: Be sure to look for the maker's mark to verify that the doll is authentic, or ask the vendor for more information if you're at a flea market. Examine the doll for any wear and tear on the outfit, and if you're looking for a specific model, make sure it's not missing accessories.
- •How to display it: These beautiful dolls are décor in their own right. Display them in groupings on a shelf. Ria houses hers in a glass cabinet to preserve their condition.

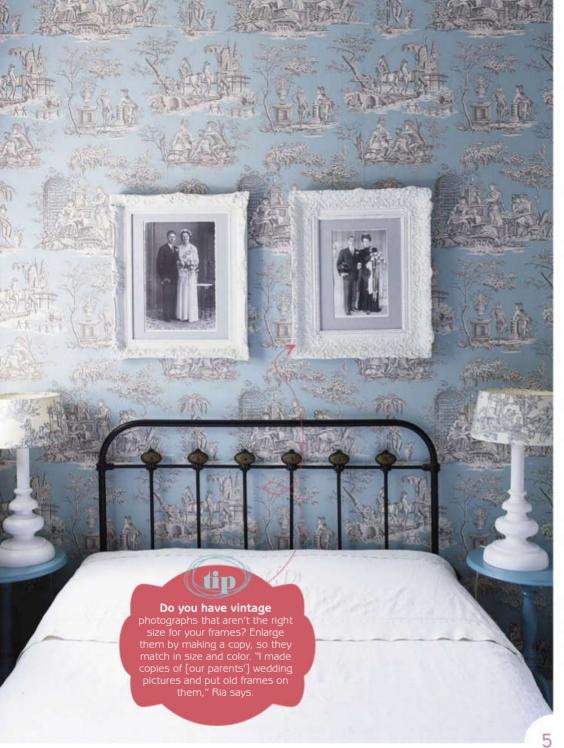

In the kitchen, Ria and Wouter wanted an antiquated look. Wouter achieved this by replacing the newer doors with older ones and preserving the original floorboards. "Making something out of nothing is what I like to do," Ria says. "When you cherish, collect and preserve old objects, an interior becomes original."

3, 4. ATTRACTIVE TRANSFERWARE

The kitchen cabinet is made of pinewood, which Ria painted a pale gray with a hint of lilac. "Here, I keep my collection of blue-and-white tableware. They are all different pieces that I have collected over many years. Because they all have blue and white prints on them, they match nicely together. We can use every piece on a daily basis, so it's not only for display," she says.

Blue toile de Jouy wallpaper in the bedroom brings bucolic charm to the space. Above the bed are wedding portraits of Wouter and Ria's parents. A black iron bed frame adds contrast to the light and bright look.

6. NOSTALGIC KEEPSAKES

Ria has kept her old dollhouse from childhood, when she first learned of her passion for decorating. "I really would like to decorate someone else's house, but because that is not the case, I decorate my own dollhouse instead," she says. The image above is of Ria's sons.

7. DRESSED IN PASTELS

Ria's workshop is on the first floor. Here, she uses a pale palette of light pink, sky blue and lilac to create an inspirational space. White-painted floorboards ground the look, and a floral border on the ceiling draws the eyes up.

Perfecting Collecting

Get a carefully curated look to your displays using homeowner Ria de Waal's tips.

- 1. Find Inspiration: "I have something with portraits. They are everywhere in our house. Old dolls, paintings and prints—I love to collect them. Above the sofa we have our own portrait gallery," Ria says. The look of the living room was initially inspired by an image she saw in a home décor magazine.
- 2. Keep Your Eyes Peeled: "I found our gallery of portraits in various different places—flea markets, fairs and even at a sale on my own street," Ria says. Be on the lookout for items that fit the theme and color palette you're going for, and wait to display your collection until it is full enough to create a grouping with impact.
- 3. Gathered Together: "I'm always decorating with my own furniture and accessories in our home, making new combinations and compositions—especially when I have a little collection such as the old leather suitcases. It's nice to place them together," she says. Display collections in clusters for a more visually appealing vignette, and don't be afraid to change up the look for the season.
- 4. Let the Look Evolve: "If I find something new, it's possible that I'll have to change the whole room to get everything to match again. I don't mind changing things 10 times. It just has to become a beautiful image to look at (in the end)," she says. "It's really playing with my own stuff, and I keep on doing this until the combination is good." Play with your arrangements until the display feels just right.
- 5. Get Feedback: If Ria is unsure about one of her designs, she'll often take pictures of her home and share them on Facebook with a group of other flea-market décor lovers. "This is a select group with the same interest in old stuff, and it's really nice to read the reactions I get. It's shared joy," she says.

8. INSPIRING OUTDOOR SPACES

Ria's decorating continues in the garden. "Old things give atmosphere to our garden. I keep the old stuff like it is and won't restore it too much," she says. The distressed ladders, shutters and planters only get better with age. In the back, Wouter also keeps his collection of 1950s mopeds.

An 1800s farmhouse becomes a delightful home away from home as a vintage bed-and-breakfast.

For many years, homeowners Cea Hopman and Guus van der Krogt collected old furniture and antiques, but lack of space kept most of their finds waiting in boxes for their time to shine.

A few years ago, the couple stumbled upon the perfect house to put their collections on display, an 1890s farmhouse near the coast.

"We both had our plans for the future. Guus wanted to start restoring cars; I wanted to open an antiques shop," Cea says. "So, we were looking for a house with a big barn

Paint by Number

Do this quick, industrial-style update to your floors for a charming finishing touch.

What you'll need:

- Numbered stencils
- Tape
- Measuring tape
- Black spray paint

What you'll do:

- 1. Choose which numbers you want on your floor and where. Find stencils in a size and style you like or create your own using a sharp X-Acto knife and cardboard.
- 2. Place the first stencil on the floor where you'd like it, tape it in place (if needed), spray paint and remove the stencil. If you want to place another number close to it, wait until the first number is completely dry.
- 3. You can do a row of consecutive numbers like this floor, marking how much space you want in between them with your measuring tape. Wait until all the paint completely dries before adding your furniture. This look pairs well with country and industrial styles; the distressed look comes with time and will add even more character.

on its grounds." The beautiful six-bedroom space inspired Cea to instead do something else—start her own bed-and-breakfast.

Rustic Restoration

Though their farmhouse was updated several times by its previous owners, the old wooden beams, paneled doors and floorboards remained. The old carpets, wallpaper and the electrical wiring were stripped out, and a new kitchen, sinks and showers were installed.

During the four years before the couple moved into the home, Cea collected interior-design magazines to get inspiration for the look. "The same style always caught my eye: a country look with antiques and flea-market finds. Some ideas stayed in my mind for all these years, to finally find their way into this house."

Prairie Chic

"The house was colored like a girl's room, in orange, purple and pink. It took us months to get rid of it!" Cea says. "I wanted to put in colors with furniture and accessories, but I strived for a white base to create a calm and spacious atmosphere. And it worked out just fine: our guests always say they start to feel very relaxed when staying here."

Redecorating the master bedroom was the last job done during the renovation. "There was not much money left," Cea says. Here, she opted for a mix of styles: wallpaper with a weathered wood design, a romantic chandelier and luxurious lace bedding. Decorations in sparkling aqua, like the elegant old railing, add an exciting touch and match with the dreamy look of the entire home.

Clever Wallcovering

Getting the look of this rustic, wood plank-inspired wall is easier—and less expensive—than you might think!

What vou'll need:

- Wallcovering of choice (wood paneling by Albany Wallpapers shown)
- Sandpaper and spackle (optional)
- Tape measure and level
- X-Acto knife
- Wallcovering primer
- Wallcovering paste
- Paint roller
- Smoothing tool
- Damp rag

What you'll do:

- 1.Clean your walls before starting. Sand any spots with sandpaper if necessary. Make sure they are smooth by filling any holes with spackle first. Remove any faceplates.
- 2. Measure the length and width of the wall you want to cover. Measure the width of your wallcovering and subtract about ½ inch from that to estimate how many pieces you'll need. Mark where you will place the strips of wallcovering on the wall, and use a level to make sure vour lines are straight. Leave about 2 inches on the top, bottom and edges of the wall so you can trim them afterwards. Use an X-Acto knife to make precise, clean cuts on your wallpaper.
- 3. Prep your walls with the primer first. Then mix your paste thoroughly before using. Lay the first strip of wallpaper down and evenly apply the paste to the back with a roller. Make sure the wallcovering is right side up and position it on the wall.
- 4.Use your smoothing tool over the strip to remove any imperfections, being careful not to relocate it. Once the strip adheres to the wall, remove any paste with a damp rag or sponge.
- 5.Repeat with the remaining strips until the wall is covered, aligning the strips as close as possible without overlapping. Carefully trim the excess paper on the edges of the walls with your knife.

7. COZY CORNER

On their way to the guestrooms, visitors walk past this lovely space with a beautiful old wicker cradle. In it is Guus' teddy bear that was given to him when he was a baby, 68 years ago. The shoes on the floor were Cea's first shoes.

8. OUTDOOR OASIS

On sunny days, breakfast is served outside at this table on the porch. Cea used mismatched chairs but painted them to fit her color scheme. Guus crafted the kitchen himself, using reclaimed wood. White and blue vintage finds complete the look: a colander, checkered textiles, enamelware and a weathered sign.

Sarma Welcoming

A peaceful palette of deep greens, grays and browns creates a neutral backdrop for weathered vintage finds.

"My interior decorating style can be best described as raw with a feminine touch," homeowner Tina van Noord says. "Mostly I work impulsively when decorating, and I'm not afraid to use color."

Tina's home has featured many hues over the years, but its latest incarnation is in the form of what she calls "lilac blue," displayed in the dining room. Her home's color scheme of dark gray, green and dark-chocolate brown provides contrast to the light furnishings and floors, giving an overall warm aura to the space.

Form and Function

"The style may also be a bit masculine," Tina says. "But it has to be functional, too. Everything that you see is usable, but also to enjoy."

Tina's obsession with vintage doors, windows and shutters, mainly displayed by being propped up against the walls, is evident in her spaces. "My goal is to work with only authentic old pieces, items that last over time, which have a history and a story. The way I decorate has developed. I notice that my style has become more restrained, and because of that our home looks more peaceful."

Find What Works for You

Tina and her husband Jan frequently visit France for its abundance of antiques markets. The couple hauls all their treasures in an old Ford transit bus, which has plenty of cargo space. "It's almost addictive to go to markets and see what you can find. We go for weekends or some days during the week, but we take our time to make choices," Tina says.

Tina's approaching to flea-market shopping also permeates the way she carefully makes design choices, and her style has slowly evolved over time. "We have become less attached to things; it's more the combination, composition, color and the atmosphere you can create. When this atmosphere is in balance, I really enjoy it. There are many different styles—you just have to discover what works for you and the home you live in."

4. PRETTY WITH PATINA

This pretty vignette shows a range of colors and textures that keep it interesting. On an old writing desk, a vintage lamp with a velvet pink lampshade is the star, placed next to antique Hugo Ulrich sheet music from the 1800s. Vintage shutters with peeling paint give a sense of history to the space.

Spice Up Your Life

Find out why these tabletop accessories are hot and handy collectibles.

- What to collect: Salt and pepper shaker sets
- History: First gaining popularity in 18th-century England, salt and pepper shaker sets replaced traditional salt cellars and were later included in cruet sets in the 19th century. From kitsch to elegant, they can be found in an array of styles, from hugging varieties to those made from mochaware, milk glass or jadeite.
- Where to find it: EBay and Etsy are your best bets if you're looking for a specific variety, such as 1930s McKee Glass Company shakers. Or try your luck at flea markets, because this affordable collectible can sometimes be found for just $10.
- What to look for: Assess the condition, checking for any chips or damage. Be prepared to pay more for high-quality sterling silver sets—some of which might just need a good polish to really shine.
- How to display it: Displayed on a shelf or grouped on a tabletop, a collection of salt and pepper shakers holds many display possibilities. You can also use a favorite set at a meal as originally intended.

The kitchen displays an eclectic mix of vintage style of the 1950s and rustic farmhouse décor, featuring checkered floors, pale-blue-painted cupboards, a vintage wine rack, an industrial numbered wooden crate and rust-colored shutters.

Good design is about the "combination, composition, color and atmosphere," Tina says.

Bazaar Basics

Homeowner Tina van Noord's five tips to find success at the fleas.

- 1. Plan Ahead: If you're traveling out of town, or even out of the country, to visit a flea market or brocante, have a plan of attack. Check what time they open so you can be there bright and early—so vou'll have first dibs on the best décor. "You want to arrive as early as possible, when the market starts," Tina says.
- 2.Take Your Time: Don't feel you have to conquer the whole market in just one day. Do a quick walkthrough and make notes of which booths you want to return to. When Tina goes on a buying trip to France, she makes sure to spend a few days, staying at a nearby hotel. "Why not make it an enjoyable stay? I see it as a little holiday," she says.
- 3.Get Inspired: The great thing about carefully curated markets is that the displays often give you inspiration for how to incorporate a vintage piece into your spaces, Tina says. Envision how a piece will look in your space and factor in if it will need a coat of paint or new upholstery. Bring a tape measure if it needs to be of a certain size.
- 4. Dress Accordingly: Walking and lugging heavy items all day, sometimes in the blistering sun, is tiring. Be sure to wear comfortable shoes, layers if the temperature might change and bring a collapsible wire cart with wheels to carry your goods. Tina says it's hard work, but the thrill of the hunt is worth it.
- 5.Make New Friends: Bargain to get the best deals, but be respectful to the antiques dealer. Strike up a conversation if you're looking for something specific. Oftentimes sellers will have special items not displayed or will know someone with just the piece you're looking for. One of Tina's fondest memories at a flea market was with a seller who later showed her a house down the street that he was restorina.

PASSION tor Primitives

One couple's love for shabby, rustic furnishings prevails not only in their antiques shop, but their home, too.

WRITTEN AND PHOTOGRAPHED BY ROBIN STUBBERT/GAP INTERIORS

2. THERE'S A PLACE FOR EVERYTHING

Gillian's son, Alex, created this lovely blue wooden chair displayed next to one of her favorite pieces—a window frame refashioned into a mirror, "Paul bought it for me ages ago, but there was never the right place to put it, until now," Gillian says. "I moved it and stored it wherever we lived until we found the right spot for it." Gillian believes that if you love a piece, buy it-you'll find the right place for it eventually.

Muted tones, distressed furniture and quirky vintage finds fill each room from top to bottom in Paul LeClaire and Gillian Mitchell's home, located above their vintage shop Pine Sampler Furniture. The couple constantly redecorates, upcycles and crafts to execute their artistic visions in their airy apartment.

"If a piece of furniture has style and purpose, I don't let the color put me off," Gillian says. "But, I want it weathered, loved and lived-in. We found a lovely wooden bench, but I hated the bright blue it had been painted. So, I put it outside in the elements for a year, which sorted it out. The paint stripped off naturally."

Homespun Style

Their 1889 apartment and shop have undergone a substantial renovation since they moved in, including a two-story extension to add an additional bedroom and space behind the shop for Paul's workshop. Gillian also has a small workspace.

"She is fantastically talented, she sews so well and has such an incredible eye, always seeing beyond the usual, never constrained by anything," Paul says of Gillian.

The couple started renovating by stripping off paneling from the walls, thrilled to find original brick walls hidden beneath the panels in the shop. They were even more excited when they discovered a lath wall under all the plaster upstairs. The wooden lath wall gives the feeling that you are in an old colonial country home and suits the couples' taste for shabby, rustic furnishings. Vintage farm tools and even nameplates of cows at a dairy farm finished off the country look of the dining area.

Reinventing the Steal

Paul and Gillian aren't afraid to reproduce a piece if they can't find an original item they're looking for. Paul, quite the handyman, has painted many shop signs hanging on the walls of the home. At this point, it's almost impossible to discern which of these is the real thing and which is purely their creation, because Gillian will go to great lengths to give items the right look by aging them with paint for a distressed finish or by stripping the existing paint.

Gillian also makes cushions of out various dyed materials made to look old or from vintage curtains she finds at flea markets. The overall aesthetic of warm tones in the home even makes it the perfect palette for fall. The simple addition of pumpkins here and there adds pops of color. Here, individual items show off their age and beauty, and the space is the embodiment of a quote by British designer William Morris: "Have nothing in your houses that you do not know to be useful or believe to be beautiful."

4. FARMHOUSE FRIENDLY

Although the general tones of the home are muted, there is nothing dull about this apartment. The dining room has some great examples of color: navy painted spindle-back chairs and a distressed blue, rustic wooden cupboard surround a pine tabletop. A dried red eucalyptus wreath and white pumpkin bring in touches of autumn.

5. AGED EXCELLENCE

Two vintage collections repeated throughout the house include handmade horses and antique weathervanes. Gillian made several of the decorative horses herself, but the weathervanes were all collected from antiques stores or salvage yards, then put on stands or given a facelift.

- History: For farmers whose well-being heavily relied on their crop yields, weathervanes were of the utmost importance to indicate changing winds. Weathervanes were common in England during the 11th century, and were widespread by the 17th century. Roosters, grasshoppers and arrows were among the most popular designs. As weathervanes grew in popularity after being brought to America, farm animals with compass points were often depicted and
- Where to find it: For the best variety in styles and eras, look to online resources
- What to look for: Early American weathervanes were typically made out of wood, copper or sheet metal. Look for ones that were once painted a bright primary color that faded with time, or an iron one. It's easier to find mass-produced ones made after the 1850s by companies like A.L. Jewell & Co. or J.W. Fiske Works. Since they are so old, they are typically damaged, which isn't a problem if shown indoors.
- How to display it: Display weathervanes like statues if they have their original base. Or, use this tip from Gillian and perch them on a piece of architectural salvage. You can even display a damaged weathervane as unique wall décor.

6. BARNYARD BEAUTY

The country feeling of the home extends to the bedroom, where Paul added a stone wall that looks anything but new. In keeping with the farmhouse theme, a barn door, large wicker basket at the foot of the bed and gardening tools like a rake and shovel breathe life into the space.

7. UNCOVERING SPLENDOR

"I actually pulled some straw stuffing through holes I made and removed the covers and some upholstery to reveal the basic wood and 'workings,'" Gillian says of her hand-me-down chair that was originally her mother's and is now displayed in a corner of the bedroom. "I love it now." A display of antique children's clothes hangs above it, on a wooden rack.

Grin and Bear It

Discover how antique teddy bears can bring nostalgic appeal to your home.

- What to collect: Antique and vintage teddy bears
- History: Created in the early 1900s after President Theodore "Teddy" Roosevelt went on a camping trip and refused to kill a tied up bear cub, Morris and Rose Michtom created the first stuffed animal bear they called "Teddy's Bear." It was such a success that they started Ideal Novelty and Toy Company in 1903. When stuffed toy bears became popular, another manufacturer, Steiff, produced them from 1903 to 1905. Later, companies like Columbia Teddy Bear Company, Harwin & Co., Knickerbocker and Aetna grew in popularity.
- Where to find it: From vintage markets to secondhand stores or eBay, an antique teddy bear is easy to find, but can set you back a few hundred dollars depending on how rare it is.
- What to look for: The first teddy bears were typically made from wool mohair with boot-button eyes, while silk plush varieties weren't introduced until the 1930s. Cotton plush models appeared a few decades later with plastic eyes. If you're going to splurge on an expensive teddy bear, be sure of its authenticity.
- How to display it: If you have several teddy bears, display them lined up in a row on a shelf or in a glass cabinet to preserve them. Each teddy bear will be different in regards to its condition, maker and if it is clothed or not. Let their individuality shine.

You just need a bit of imagination to see that something beautiful can be added to shelving or simply displayed on its own.

8. CUSTOM CREATIONS

Because this couple is so skilled, they have been able to reimagine furniture, reinvent objects and turn salvaged architectural pieces into useful storage. One example is an arched screen door Paul found at a salvage yard, which he turned into a door for a wooden storage cabinet. Gillian stores folded bedding, an old basket and ceramic pots inside. The rough blue paint job makes it appear as old as the screen that inspired it.

9. FOUND AND FORMED

Many of the home's vintage items reflect the couple's creative talents, including mannequins and cobbler's shoes that are displayed in each room. Paul is quite an artist, and even drew one of the mannequins with charcoal, displayed on a shelf in the bathroom underneath a millinery shop sign. The black and white theme is timeless and evokes the old feeling of an antiques shop.

A retro, rustic guesthouse in Montana brings a new twist to the traditional log cabin.

BY REBEKAH WAHLBERG
PHOTOGRAPHY BY AUDREY HALL

It all started with a neon sign. That's not something you typically want to hear when you're redesigning your interior, but in the case of this Bozeman, Montana, guesthouse, the bold colors drawn from the sign mesh flawlessly with the retro, rustic vibe.

Interior designer Abby Hetherington found the neon bar sign at a local antique store, and she immediately knew it would be the perfect inspiration piece for the guesthouse she was working on. The homeowners have a modern-styled main residence, so they wanted something a little less traditional for the guesthouse.

"We wanted a rustic flair, so guests would feel like they're visiting Montana," Abby says. "But we wanted a fun twist on rustic Montana."

DIY Map Wall

Designer Abby Hetherington hired a graphic designer to colorize and create wallpaper from a topographical map she found while antiquing. A cheap DIY alternative to this custom map wallpaper is to use old maps as a kind of mosaic on your walls. Here's how:

- 1. Collect your materials: Find atlases and maps at flea markets or antiques stores. Make sure you have enough to cover your wall!
- 2. Before you commit to wallpapering, tack your maps on the wall to decide on a pattern you like.
- 3. Once you're sure about how it looks, coat the backs of your maps with wallpaper glue, making sure to wet the corners and edges. If the paper you're using is thin and fragile, dilute the glue and coat the walls instead to avoid damaging the paper.
- 4. Use a paintbrush to brush out any bubbles; then let everything dry.
- 5. If you're nervous about how wallpaper glue might affect your wall and your chosen paper, use pushpins to hold up your maps instead.

The more you look, the more details you find in the space.

4. RUGGED YET REFINED

Snowshoes on the wall and worn leather furniture may be typical fare for a log cabin in the woods, but Abby added a modern flair with boldly colored accessories, like the royal-blue throw pillow. The dark hardwood floors and leather furniture bring masculine style to the space in a chic way.

5. WALL-TO-WALL WONDER

In the bathroom, the wood-framed art and mirror almost blend in with the log-patterned wallpaper, but colorful vintage artwork and greenery provide some contrast. When using a bold wallpaper, be sure to keep scale in mind. The large print on this wallpaper keeps the room feeling open and airy.

6. A CURATED COLLECTION

Abby incorporated several pieces the homeowners already had into the guesthouse's design. "They wanted to bring out some kitschy and fun pieces they couldn't fit in the main residence," Abby says.

Kitschy Cabin

The house—with a comfortably sized bedroom, bathroom and living area with a coffee bar is bursting with one-of-a-kind flea-market finds. It's busy, but not overwhelming, and the more you look, the more details you find in the space. From the high, exposed-beam ceiling to the snowshoes and sleds adorning the walls, it's exactly the kind of woodsy lodge you'd expect to find in Montana—but logpatterned wallpaper and a fridge made from the running boards of an old truck give it a touch of kitschy, vintage charm.

Decorated with Love

The homeowners incorporated several of their own pieces into their guesthouse, like the worn leather chair and ottoman in the bedroom.

"Sometimes people think when you're doing a remodel, you have to get all brand-new pieces," Abby says, but that's just not the case. Decorating your space with pieces you already know and love not only helps save money, but also gives your home a personality unique to you—family heirlooms and antiques aren't a dime a dozen.

"We want to provide spaces that reflect the family," Abby says. "They wanted a cozy, fun atmosphere where they could throw Super Bowl parties and have guests stay."

Use accessories that reflect you as an individual.

7. DREAMY BEDROOM In the bedroom, the color palette of blues and reds is subdued for a softer, more peaceful vibe, suitable for catching some z's.

Don't Sweat the Small Stuff

Abby Hetherington spends at least a month shopping for the perfect pieces for any project she works on. Here are her tips for accessorizing your home so it reflects your personality.

- "Do not use accessories just to fill space," Abby says. That's a recipe for an overwhelming space, and your great pieces will get lost in the chaos.
- "Use accessories that reflect you as an individual." It's your home, and Abby says visitors should walk in and immediately know that. Find pieces that appeal to your interests as well as your design goals.
- Pay attention to materials and colors, Abby says. If your color palette is monochromatic or neutral, find accessories with contrasting textures to add some visual interest. And if you use a lot of bright colors, keep your textures and patterns to a minimum to keep your pieces from clashing.

2. AROUND THE CLOCK

A cluster of vintage alarm clocks, working or not, is a fanciful way to create a budget-friendly display. These feature brands like Gabriel and Westclox's 1930s Baby Ben alarms, which can be found for as little as $10 if they aren't working or $25 if they are. Look for midcentury-modern designs that appeal to you or classic vintage designs like these.

3. DOCTOR'S ORDERS

Antique apothecary bottles are a beautiful nod to the past. Some, like these, include the original glass stopper and boldly printed white and gold embossed labels. Bottles from the 1880s, from brands like Whitall Tatum Company, come in a variety of sizes and can be found for around $50 to $150 a piece. depending on the condition.

When it comes to following your heart, antiques dealer Sue Jackson is a testament to how you can achieve success if you pursue your dream.

After a close friend passed away from cancer 20 years ago, Sue made a drastic move. "I realized then how short life could be and wanted to follow my heart and do what I had really wanted to do—which was open an antiques shop," she says.

Her first shop, Battered Barn, opened in 1991, and two years later, she opened Country Roads Antiques in Orange County, California, which she still runs today. Here we look at some of her vintage collections and give you this insider's tips for scoring deals at fleas.

Ingrained in History

"I grew up in a house filled with antiques, and my grandmother had them, as well," Sue says. "I have an old clock that my folks had their entire lives. I will always remember my dad winding that clock each and every day. When I walk by that clock, I can still picture my dad winding it."

Sue followed in the footsteps of her parents, who sold antiques at a flea market when they retired. Her favorite family heirlooms include a box full of vintage handkerchiefs that belonged to her grandmother. "Back during World War II, my grandmother and others would send hankies to each other to keep. I have a box full of [handkerchiefs] my grandmother had pinned on the envelopes they arrived in and the notes they wrote to each other."

Redesign with Finds

"I love vintage décor because [every item has] a story to tell—even if I don't always know the story," Sue says. "I also like antiques more than newer pieces because antique furniture is built really well. They aren't mass-produced, so they are all a little different, with their own stories."

Sue has many items that she will never part with, but one of her favorite aspects about being an antiques dealer is the ability to constantly redecorate when she finds new pieces.

"I get bored easily, so moving things around, adding to my existing collections or selling something I am tired of is what inspires me," Sue says. "It's in my blood, like it is in many of us. It is the thrill of the hunt, and when I find something that a customer really wants and has been looking for, it just makes me happy!"

Wake Up and Smell the Coffee

The only thing better than a good cup of Jo is a colorful display of vintage coffee tins.

- What to collect: Antique coffee tins
- History: Starting in the early 1900s, a new process called chromolithography made it possible for coffee cans to be mass-produced. They were made in a variety of styles depending on the brand, with colorful, ornate graphics and in shapes from rectangular to triangular.
- Where to find it: Coffee tins are easy to come by at flea markets, tag sales, antiques shops and online. Their prices vary depending on the age, brand and condition. For a one-pound can with a very intricate design, expect to pay $125 and up. The smaller, key-wind-style tins are more affordable, in the $30 range.
- What to look for: Find tins that speak to you. If you love Maxwell House Coffee, find an antique one, with the iconic blue tin and orange lettering. From Caswell's to White Star Coffee and more, these pieces of advertising history appeal to coffee lovers everywhere.
- How to display it: Let the designs of these fanciful tins show themselves off. You can use them in a practical way as storage vessels or house them in a glass cabinet.

Kindness Counts

When it comes to striking a bargain, a little consideration goes a long way. Here are antiques dealer Sue Jackson's tips for closing the deal.

- Make Nice: "Be nice and polite!" Sue says. "Going to a flea market and low-balling a dealer on their price or telling the dealer what is wrong with the item you want to buy and tearing it apart, in my opinion, won't get you the best price."
- Ask If There's Wiggle Room:
 "The best way to get a better deal at a flea market is to ask if they have any room to do better on the price," Sue says.
- Buy in Bulk: "If you are interested in more than one piece the dealer is selling, ask them if they can do better on the prices if you buy several."

Surround yourself with things that make you happy and that you love.

I firmly believe that the way our homes are decorated tells a story about each of us.

5. IF THE SHOE FITS

Nothing brings whimsy to a home like a collection of antique baby shoes. From Victorian-era leather high-tops with buttons to black Mary Janes, shoes from the 1900s are easy to find and will only set you back about $20 a pair.

6. IF THESE WALLS COULD TALK

One of Sue's favorite collections is her pieces of architectural salvage. "I love that if they could talk, they would have great stories about the buildings and homes that they used to be a part of," she says. "They just call my name!" In her bedroom, a circular windowpane hangs above the bed as an eye-catching statement piece.

This 18 Halloween

Let spooky ghouls and creepy critters decorate your home with this vintage find.

- What to collect: 1950s Jack-O-Lite lanterns
- History: Made of papier-mâché pulp, these double-sided jack-o-lanterns in the form of pumpkins or cats were made in the 1940s and '50s. They were originally packaged in a small box with instructions and could be hung from the ceiling, illuminated by a flashlight. They also included paper inserts to fill the holes for the eyes and mouth and had wire handles.
- Where to find it: These lanterns are easy to come by on online sources like eBay or Etsy.
 Prepare to pay around $60 to $100 (or more), depending on the condition. Keep your eyes peeled for vintage Halloween décor at flea markets all year long.
- What to look for: Though they may have some scratches, these papier-mâché pieces have stood the test of time fairly well. Look for their bright colors, wire handles and, if you're lucky, the original box.
- How to display it: Because they are so bright and eye-catching, there is no need to add much to this display. Stack a smaller lantern on a larger one, and let them bring joy to your home this All Hallows' Eye.

7. JUST MY TYPE

Antique Smith Premier No. 2 typewriters were produced in the early 1900s and featured a separate set of keys for uppercase and lowercase letters. Sue's features a wooden base and rusty patina. These typewriters are rare and can set you back $100 to $250, depending on the condition. A piece of artwork in its own right, Sue's Smith Premier No. 2 is a beautiful statement piece on her coffee table.

8. FOR KIDS AT HEART

Halloween collectibles come in all spaces and sizes, and are a fun way to bring festive touches to your home. Here, antique noisemakers and a vintage Butterfinger box ring in the holiday in a vintage way. Let their bright orange hues make a curious display on a table, or display them in an antique jack-o-lantern.

Roots of

Designer Randy Boyd honors heritage and authentic style in the city of his forefathers.

BY JICKIE TORRES | PHOTOGRAPHY BY MARK TANNER | STYLING BY JACQUELINE deMONTRAVEL

Anyone who's been in the market for that perfect vintage cottage knows it takes time, energy and a lot of legwork to find just the right one. However, for interior designer Randy Boyd, the right house came looking for him.

Randy's roots in Laguna Beach, California, run deep. His family was among the first to colonize the region back in 1864. His grandmother, Marie Thurston, was the first teacher in Laguna. It comes as no surprise that from his connection to one of the area's founding families, Randy had a reputation for helping the best of Laguna grow and flourish.

"I definitely am known in the area for restoring old homes," he says. "It's always such a shame to see an interesting 1920s cottage torn down and some stucco box go up in its place."

Preserving History

When his realtor came calling one day about a home that was about to get listed on the market, Randy heeded his calling and decided on a whim to check it out. The house, built in 1920 was quaint, at just 920 square feet. While it was in need of restorative attention, it had an expansive double parcel of land and charming bones.

At first, Randy, accustomed to living in smaller homes, was content to focus on light restoration and refinishing. He centered his attention on the kitchen and guest bath first. But years later, he decided to convert a portion of his considerable garden area into living space. A large-scale remodel ensued where Randy added a 600square-foot great room, reconfigured what was the living room into the master bedroom and transformed the dining room into a large entry hall. What was originally one of the bedrooms

2. AT HOME WITH HEIRLOOMS

This dining table was purchased at a flea market in Paris. The sideboard, also a French find, is made from reclaimed wood and holds wine bottles in carved decorative holes that run the length of the sideboard. An heirloom, a painting of Randy's grandmother, hangs above it.

3. BLACK AND WHITE DELIGHT

Randy used Belgium limestone for the backsplash and the countertop in the kitchen. The dramatic pairing of black and white is classic yet daring. A few pitchers in his collection are displayed on a custom shelf.

was turned into a master bath and closet. Randy made sure each project retained the historical integrity of the house.

Earthy Elegance

The home's décor is a mix of heirloom collections, global flourishes and relaxed yet sophisticated earthy style, which he calls "collected."

"I think it's a mixture of the things I place together," he says. "There's some casual rustic pieces, some pieces that are a little bit more elegant and then there are pieces that I've inherited. I think it makes for a warm, comfortable atmosphere."

Portraits and paintings adorn most of the walls to offer unique warmth to the décor. One special portrait recently unearthed from Thurston Intermediate's basement adds striking beauty to the great room: a portrait of Randy's grandmother, that was originally commissioned to hang in the entry hall of the school but never made it onto the wall. Luckily, with Randy it managed to find its true home.

4. COZY COMFORTS

A well-edited collection of antiques and collectibles pair nicely with tailored bed linens and statement furniture in the bedroom. Working with small rooms, Randy chose items with the right scale and proportion to complement—not overtake—the space. Supple floor rugs warm the hand-treated wood floors, adding comfort and style in one.

5. THE PERFECT FIT

The corner hutches in the entry hall were purchased during the renovation and were just the right size to fit in the corners. The hutches dramatically alter the space, creating not only efficient and decorative storage but also warmth. The new wood floors were hand-scraped and distressed to impart an authentic vintage vibe. Vintage botanical pressings complete the look.

6. GILDED PLEASURE

The top painting was purchased while on a trip to Rhode Island. The other two were from local Laguna artists. The occasional table that holds a collection of vintage books dates back to the 17th century and was another Parisian purchase.

7. MODERN IN THE MIX

This cozy bathroom nook is decorated with a chair that belonged to Randy's grandmother. He recovered the Victorian chair in a bright, unexpected chinoiserie and lacquered the woodwork white for a fun, modern twist.

Tips from the Pro

Designer Randy Boyd's tips to build a comfortable home full of personal style

- Pick what pleases your eye. Regardless of the trends or expectations, only things that appeal to your aesthetic will help you create the perfect home.
- Always be aware of scale. Don't force a purchase if it's not the right size and scale. Even if you love a piece in the store, if it's not the right fit, chances are you won't love it at home.
- Invest in antiques when you can. Buy antique items when you can and when it's practical for you. Not only will they last longer than most new furniture, but they will add an unmatched element of warmth and style.
- If you can splurge on something, splurge on upholstery. Cutting corners on fabric often leads to having to redo the project sooner. Buy the best upholstery you can afford, because it will save you money in the end.
- Don't rely on matching. For fabrics and accessories, blending is much more interesting than matching. Consider a palette to stick with, but don't get too hung up on matching colors and patterns precisely, which can be boring and predictable.

SCHOOL

A converted 1900s schoolhouse gets new life as a stylish condo dripping with eclectic antiques.

BY KAREN WILHELMSEN | PHOTOGRAPHY BY SEAN LITCHFIELD

For the homeowners of this 1,500-square-foot condo in Boston's North End neighborhood, interior designer Nikki Dalrymple was the perfect fit because of a shared eclectic sense of style.

"My own design aesthetic is rooted in the mix of using both antique and modern pieces in a space—which they appreciated," Nikki says. "Spaces that draw from different historical eras lend themselves to having more character and feeling more like a home. They become spaces with a story, a life."

Discover how she furnished this converted schoolhouse with an eccentric array of pieces to highlight the clients' love for all that is vintage.

Schoolhouse Rocks

This home started out as a private high school for boys in the early 1900s and was renovated into condos in the '90s. This condo in particular used to be part of the school's library. Nikki's goal was to maintain the rich sense of history in the space and draw attention to the building's grand 13foot-tall ceilings, while also updating it with modern appeal.

"Because it is a first-floor unit, the space was low on light and felt a bit cold. [The homeowners] wanted to cozy-up the space and bring some colorful impact to the rooms," she says. "They also wanted to show off their fantastic collections from their worldly travels, while having the opportunity to display new vintage and antique pieces I found for them."

Refurbished Wonders

"Both the clients and I have a 'more is more' sensibility, so it was very fun to fill the space with antiques and vintage pieces," Nikki says.

Nikki kept a few items from the homeowners' previous space, such as two sofas, which she had reupholstered, and an oversized French mirror. Other pieces received DIY treatment, such as the buffet repainted in a soft white to have an aged look and the Swedish dining room chairs that were repainted in black with a thin gold trim.

"In this project, the color translated to the upholstered pieces and textiles, so I didn't want to overwhelm the room with color on the walls as well. I felt that the neutral tone on the walls allowed the artwork and displayed collections to really stand out in the space."

On the Hunt

Score bargain finds with Nikki's 4 ideas for savvy shopping.

- Dig Deeper: "Shop flea markets and antiques malls—and visit them frequently. There are always tons of hidden gems hiding in plain view," Nikki says.
- Make Connections: "If you go enough, dealers will start remembering you and the sorts of things you're on the hunt to find. I'm not shy to pass out my contact information so that a dealer can notify me when they've brought in a new selection of vintage goodies."
- Appreciate the Imperfections: "I rarely fix up antique accessories that I buy. I love the patina. I think it gives it a nice sense of history and age."
- Pretty Patina: "I also rarely buy fine antique furniture, as I tend to think the look is too fussy. Give me something chipped or cracked, and I'll find it a home," she says

Thrifty Savings

Try Nikki's 3 budget-friendly tips to save on your room redesign.

- Add DIY touches. "I have always been a fan of mixing high-end pieces with budgetfriendly items. The trick is making sure those less expensive (or big-box store options) look luxe. Often times, I will buy a lamp for a client from a big-box store but create a custom shade to really make it sparkle," Nikki says.
- Know when to save or splurge. Window treatments and textiles are another way you can save big on a room makeover. "Buy the ready-made panels, but have a workroom or seamstress add a nice, thick lining to them to give them a sense of heft and presence," she says.
- Customize it. "Throw pillows can be another place to save money as well. Buy ready-made, overscale pillows (nothing smaller than 20×20), and add a trim to make them look custom."

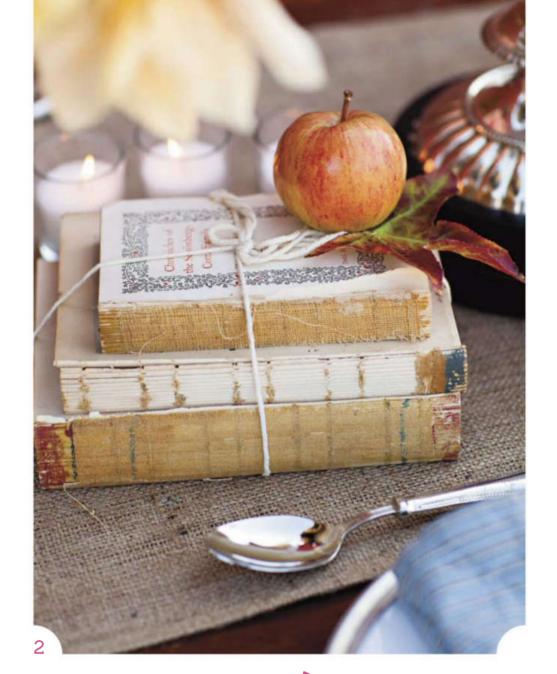

Cohesive Collections

Try interior designer Nikki Dalrymple's tips for tying the look of your vintage pieces together.

- Color: "I find that there are two ways to do this," Nikki says. "One way is through color. For instance, we created two custom, overscale metal curio cabinets, which flank the clients' antique buffet table in the dining room. The pieces were built to house the clients' amazing collection of tabletop pieces. We chose to focus on displaying only the white ironstone and whiteware porcelain, to give the collection a sense of cohesion and balance."
- Scale: "The second trick I use is finding smaller spaces to contain collections. For example, in the den off the living room, we purchased an oversized display hutch to house their collections of books, boxes and small objects."

FALL IN

Let the season's harvest of pumpkins, flowers and apples provide your rustic table with the beauty of nature's palette.

BY KAREN WILHELMSEN | PHOTOGRAPHY BY BRET GUM | STYLING BY JACQUELINE DEMONTRAVEL

Before the winter months arrive and beckon us to stay indoors, take advantage of autumn's cool breezes and warm color palette with a tablescape worthy of guests.

Taking a cue from the season's harvest to set the scene, this table was inspired by the orange, yellow, green and reddish hues of pumpkins, making a rustic barnyard the perfect backdrop for this fun feast.

Here's how to get the look with 6 simple essentials.

1 Mix and Mismatch

For a casual vibe at your shindig, don't feel the need to bring out a dining table with a matching set of chairs. A mismatched look can be charming, while also providing more textures for maximum visual appeal. Here, wicker chairs, a chippy bench and a farmhouse table complete the rustic scene. For a more elegant look, add an area rug underneath or consider hanging a chandelier from a tree.

2 Book Smarts

The yellowing and tattered pages of vintage books past their prime can still serve a function as décor on your fall table. Simply gather a collection of three (with or without the binding still intact), stack them by height and tie them together with a piece of ribbon or twine. This provides the perfect platform for apples or leaves to add various heights and textures to your tablescape.

3 Floral Infusion

Set the table with a huge bouquet of in-season flowers in a mix of white, green, pink and burgundy hues. Flowing out of a cream-colored iron vase, the flowers should be the tallest element on your table, placed in the middle as the centerpiece.

$oldsymbol{1}$ Go Green

An eye-catching focal point you can use long after the party, a wreath made from fall foliage provides a nature-inspired look that adds height to the scene and brings an added pop of color. When dressing an outdoor space, think big: you need to fill more room than you would indoors, so don't be afraid of oversized pieces.

3 Naturally Beautiful

Nothing says fall like pumpkins and apples. Gather them in various shapes, colors and sizes to add a plethora of vibrant interest to your look—without breaking the bank. For more farm flair, bales of hay not only add height to your vignette, but also provide additional seating for guests in a photo-worthy fashion.

6 Touch of Glamour

To juxtapose rough textures like burlap and wood, add a shiny element to your table with silver accents. From vintage flatware to antique candlesticks or votives, the reflective surfaces will bring a hint of glamour to your barnyard affair.

Filled with French antiques and plenty of charm, Confectionique market instantly transports shoppers to the streets of Paris.

BY SHELBY DEERING

As you step into Confectionique, you might feel as if you've suddenly traveled to a Paris flea market, complete with the music of French crooners and the scent of lavender drifting in the air.

The shop was opened by Anastasia Korbitz and her husband, Adam, in 2010, and the two journey to France twice a year to gather finds. Anastasia also sources antiques from friends who ship them over from France.

French Sophistication

"I have traveled all over the United States and Europe, but I have never been so creatively moved by any other place than Paris. With its influence on my creative soul, it felt so natural for me to have a business that reflects my loves: Paris, vintage and handmade," Anastasia says.

You never know what you'll discover at Confectionique: a white-ceramic statue that may have resided in a lovely

French garden, cheerful red cookware that would look right at home in Julia Child's kitchen, a worn horse saddle that may have galloped across the French countryside.

Anastasia says, "Vintage has a history, and there is something quite charming about a good story found in an object. History in France offers a story that is different and often much older than what we have in the United States."

Entice the Senses

Confectionique is also a crafter's paradise, stocked with vintage ephemera, ribbon, buttons, charms, photos and glitter found at French flea markets. The store offers crafting classes and features wares created by local artisans.

In its previous life, the space served as a bakery, which tickles Anastasia and inspired the name of the store.

"Paris is a candyland for the senses. I hope that Confectionique can be a candyland for all those who visit."

She adds, "Paris is color, layer, texture, art, form and design. It's the gardens cared for with tenderness and pride and the broad boulevards with cafés filled with customers." Anastasia has certainly captured the spirit of French joie de vivre here at Confectionique.

Parisian Paradise

Anastasia and Adam will be hosting their first guided Paris flea-market trip in September 2016. Here, Anastasia shares her expert tips for shopping French fleas.

- Gets the Goods: Go early if you want the best product selection. But if you want better deals, go at the end of the market.
- Buy in Bulk: Negotiate the price on a collection of items versus just one item.
- Nail Down the Basics: Even if you don't speak French, use a few basic words here and there. Be courteous and say "bonjour" and "merci." This helps to create a space in which you can better negotiate.
- Learn to Bargain: Don't be afraid to bargain, but don't go too low—this will quickly end any deal and you risk offending the vendor.
- Equipped with Cash: Always bring plenty of cash, preferably in smaller bills. Vendors rarely have change for large bills.

What's in Store

Plan your visit to Confectionique and find out what beautiful treasures await you.

- When: Confectionique opens on the second weekend of the months listed on their website. Markets are kicked off on Thursday evenings with a "Nuit Blanche" (French for "white night") shopping event, a nod to the famous all-night arts festival in Paris.
- Where: Located inside the Middleton Municipal Airport, 8300 Airport Road, Middleton, Wisconsin (about 20 miles northwest of Madison).
- What to expect: Creator Anastasia debuts a new theme at each market. Past themes include "Summer in Provence" and "The French Home." Anastasia says that the markets "make our customers feel as if they have traveled to a special event." The store is packed with finds like artwork, jewelry, statuettes, books, glassware and more.
- Shopping tip: Because there are only seven markets a year, Anastasia suggests visitors "bring a list of must-have's or giftgiving needs with you."
- Can't make it to Wisconsin? Shop Anastasia's three Etsy shops: Confectionique, Brocanturee and French Fineries. For more information and tips, pick up Confectionique's Little Guide to Paris at confectionique.com.

Design Through the Travel back in time to get inspiration for your next vintage-inspired design.

BY REBEKAH WAHLBERG | PHOTOGRAPHY BY HEATHER HOBHOUSE

Take a trip through history with these tips for designing a vintage home; pick a template for a home straight from the past without sacrificing any modern conveniences.

Interior design expert Keeley Harris writes about the distinct design style of each decade from the 1920s to the '70s in her book Style Me Vintage: Home: A Practical and Inspirational Guide to Retro Interior Design. From popular colors and patterns to significant historical events, Keeley gives readers a peek into how the cultural climate of a time period influenced its design, and shows how you can incorporate details from each decade into your home.

1930s: Art Deco Inspiration

Design innovation took a backseat in light of the Great Depression in the 1930s, but homemakers were inspired by the Art Deco style of the '20s and the sleek Moderne style popular in the design of much of the time's new technology, namely automobiles and radios. For a 1930s look, pair ornate Art Deco pieces with the swooping lines and arches of Moderne furniture on a backdrop of pale greens and pinks. Look for Art Deco pieces mass-produced in the 1930s, as they are cheaper and easier to find than the luxury, handcrafted items popular during the '20s.

2. INDUSTRIOUS DÉCOR

In a time of war and unrest, an attitude of "make-do-and-mend" became necessary, Keeley writes. A 1940s living room was characterized by muted colors and worn but well-loved furniture. Here, stacked antique suitcases create a vintage feel while doubling as a side table with storage.

3. RADIANTLY RETRO

Midcentury Modern style, a term coined in the 1950s, employed sleek, functional furniture and a classic Americana look. In the kitchen, primary colors, checkered floors and Formica surfaces prevailed.

1940s: Wartime Nostalgia

As the world continued to struggle through dark times, the threat of war defined the 1940s, and home décor reflected that. Muted pastels were popular, and homespun, patchwork décor dominated. If you're looking to recreate a 1940s feel in your home, pile up your cozy quilts and mix-and-match furniture from earlier periods for an eclectic, gently worn look. Create visual interest by contrasting patterns, from soft, intricate florals to gentle patchwork geometry. Adorning your walls with wartime art and advertising will help complete the look.

1950s: Atomic Age

With World War II over and a population boom imminent, 1950s design reflected the fun, lighthearted attitude of the time. "The '50s form the backbone of vintage home style today," Keeley says. Midcentury Modern style was born in the '50s, and the coming of the space age inspired the design of the time as well. A 1950s-inspired palette provides a multitude of options for interior décor, from bold, contrasting colors and zany, abstract patterns to sleek, swooping curves and free-form organic shapes.

1960s: Hower Power

Liberating social change, an intense space race and an attitude of exploration provided a vibrant backdrop for 1960s design developments. Sixties design inspiration ranged from "sleek stylish" to "hip and far-out," from futuristic monochrome to bold, psychedelic patterns. Plastic became more widely available in the home, resulting in uniquely molded chairs and tables. To get the groovy '60s feel in your own home, embrace vibrant, wild colors and patterns, and look out for statement furniture pieces like egg chairs and mushroom lamps.

4. DECORATIVE DIGS

The 1960s were defined by social change and liberation, which is reflected in the bright colors and curving, fluid lines of the popular designs of the time. Get the look with a tulipstyle table or a groovy orange side chair.

5. ECLECTIC COMBINATION

Combine pieces from different decades to create an eclectic look in your home. A cowhide rug reminiscent of the '60s, worn metal Tolix chairs and a vintage school map on the wall create a distinct look.

Craft Your Own Vintage Home

Get interior design expert Keeley Harris's tips for creating a look all your own using a mix of several eras.

- Start with a checklist. Know what you need for a room, from furniture to decorations to liahting. Going out with a definite list will help you make sure you get what you need—and will keep you from overshopping.
- Get the right furniture. Furniture is the cornerstone of any room, so be sure to find the perfect pieces that will evoke the vintage look you're going for. Furniture doesn't necessarily have to come from the exact decade you're trying to recreate, as long as it is reminiscent of the spirit of the time.
- Collect vintage art. Art can really pull a room together, and finding vintage prints is a cakewalk. Keeley suggests framing vintage magazine covers and advertisements for a distinct look that won't break your budget.
- Figure out where to shop. Look for local antiques fairs and shops, flea markets and thrift stores. Garage sales may have hidden treasures, and Keeley even suggests keeping your eyes open for free items someone else is throwing away. Auctions are a great place to find antiques too—attend local auction houses or go online.

Uptown

Whether you want a town- or country-inspired look, designer William Yeoward's classic sense of style will bring sophistication to your spaces.

BY KAREN WILHELMSEN | PHOTOGRAPHY BY GAVIN KINGCOME

1. ECLECTIC ARRANGEMENT

In the drawing room, sky-blue walls set the stage for the introduction of a variety of colors: embroidered curtains with a green silk velvet trim, a Turkish rug and Bohemian patterned pillow. In the glazed cabinet is a collection of lusterware and china, while a ceramic lion watches over the room, sitting on the windowsill.

An intimate invitation into his homes.

William Yeoward's new book, William Yeoward at Home: Elegant Living in Town and Country, takes you on a tour of his elegant abodes to give you an insider glimpse at his personal style. His country house, originally comprised of two separate buildings—a Victorian schoolhouse and schoolmistress's cottage—was converted in the 1970s, he writes.

"By the time I arrived 18 years ago, everything was looking horrendously tatty, but the more fundamental challenge was that the layout was completely hopeless for the way we wanted to live. I came to the conclusion that the only solution was to tear down the entire link and start again, reconfiguring the space to create a new entrance, complete with the porch shown here, and hall," Yeoward writes.

Read on to take a look at his town and country spaces and see how to bring his refined designs home.

State of Splendor

Try interior designer William Yeoward's design tips for everyday elegance.

- 1. Make it last. "When you buy something for your home, it is essential that the piece will give you continued pleasure, not just immediate gratification followed by years of disappointment," Yeoward writes. Invest in high-quality pieces that don't just follow temporary fashion trends.
- 2. Highlight a room's best features. "The kitchen seems much more vertical and cries out for interest at a high level to make the room hold together visually," Yeoward writes. Because his kitchen has such high ceilings, he created a display of dishware to draw the eyes up.
- 3. Add interest with details. "Architecturally, there is nothing intrinsically special about this space, so it was a matter of making the most of it by adding some interesting decorative details," Yeoward writes of his stair landing. "A detail that has worked really well can be seen on the tray ceiling." When doing a home remodel, add timeless touches that will call attention without overwhelming a room.
- 4. Use pattern sparingly. "When there is much pattern ... defining the space, you can't put too many more patterns into the mix," he says of his bedroom, which features a large-scale floral print and simple green curtains.
- 5. Accentuate the vibe. In his bathroom, Yeoward found the space's sloping ceiling had different "architectural character" than the rest of the house and called for a "more restrained, even cottagey, style of decoration," he says. Design with a room's feeling in mind.

3. THE COUNTRY MUDROOM

In the mudroom, Yeoward's triple bench is an antique from the early 1900s, originally used in a shoe store. He has a small collection of embroidered velvet hats that "are minor works of art." he says. Rattan baskets hold everyday essentials like shoes as well as antique finds like wooden tennis rackets with stretchers.

4. ALL IN THE DETAILS

This close-up of Yeoward's blueand-white transferware and painted ceramics repeats the color scheme of the hallway, where oak, terracotta, iron and stone seamlessly blend together. "There's so much to appreciate in the patterns on these ceramics that you need to take a close look: freely drawn flowers, a sentimental couple and a ship approaching a port," he writes.
